“My Child Struggles With Friendships”

From the Director: One of the comorbid factors for some students with attention and learning issues is that social relationships can be quite a challenge. Their brains process the subtleties of the “give and take” of friendships differently from a neurotypical child. Read the blog post HERE.

Featured Article: Helping kids with learning disabilities understand the language of friendship

While children with learning disabilities may know how to initiate friendships, many of their relationships fail because they don't know how to sustain them. To read the article, click HERE.
